

The Battle of Princeton Public Archaeology Day

@ Princeton Battlefield State Park

SATURDAY
10 NOV 2018

Come explore history right here in Princeton!

Join students, faculty, and professionals in the archaeological and historical exploration of the Princeton Battlefield! What are the material traces of the Battle of Princeton? How can battle remains be recovered and interpreted? How might the cultural landscape be presented and preserved? Come and participate in excavation, metal-detection, ground-penetrating radar, and artifact study, and learn first-hand what archaeology is all about. All ages are welcome; no experience required.

9am–3pm

Volunteers are welcome to participate in all aspects of the archaeological project on a rotating basis. Excavation, metal-detection, ground-penetrating radar, and artifact study will take place throughout the day. Tours of the Princeton Battlefield will also be offered throughout the day.

To participate in the fieldwork, please RSVP to (steph@princeton.edu).

10am–10:30am and 1pm–1:30pm

Lecture: The Battle of Princeton: What Happened and Why Does it Matter?

-The Historic Interpreters of the Princeton Battlefield Society

11am–11:30am & 2pm–2:30pm

Lecture: The Commemoration of the Battle of Princeton -Blake McGready

PIZZA by NOMAD will be provided!

Public Archaeology Day is an event in conjunction with the Princeton class, HUM 350: Battle Lab, which has been funded in part by a grant from the Humanities Council's David A. Gardner '69 Magic Grant

A&A
DEPARTMENT OF
ART & ARCHAEOLOGY

Being Human
A FESTIVAL OF THE HUMANITIES